Pdf.[Atypical imaging of the posterior cranial fossa in pregnancy]. Cranial neuropathies occur frequently during pregnancy. The pregnant brain is susceptible to compressive forces resulting from dynamic cerebral edema and altered cerebrospinal fluid dynamics. The clinical symptoms are variable. The delayed diagnosis may be detrimental to the fetus. The aim of the study was to evaluate the ability of CT and MRI to identify the causes of symptoms in the posterior fossa of pregnant women. A retrospective study was conducted between 1999 and 2006 in pregnant women presenting with symptoms of a cranial neuropathy in the posterior fossa. All of the patients had brain CT and/or MRI performed during pregnancy. Twenty-seven of 50 patients were included in the study. Age ranged from 20 to 38 years. Thirteen patients had a CT scan, 18 patients had an MRI and 1 patient
