The perchlorate-dipicolinic acid (PDA) complex was used to synthesize an affinity analog which has improved affinity for human serum albumin (HSA). At 2.0 M PDA, the binding properties of the PDA analog were very similar to those of PDA itself. The analog completely blocks the binding of HSA to vinblastine and vincristine and also competes with p-aminobenzoic acid for the binding site. The adduct is very stable in solution, but it can be destroyed rapidly by dilution or by raising the pH of the reaction mixture. No adduct is formed when the synthesis of the PDA analog is performed in dimethylsulfoxide. The present disclosure relates generally to headgear and, more particularly, to a headgear construction to protect against sun exposure and overheating. In certain situations, such as outdoor activities, wearing a conventional hat can be cumbersome and prevent the wearer from moving with ease. Furthermore, heat from the sun can cause discomfort and/or sickness for those who engage in outdoor activities. A hat that provides protection from the sun and also allows the wearer to move freely can be desirable. Although conventional wide brim hats provide protection from the sun ba244e880a
