For any books you have a specific reason to invest in, it's worth checking out the ebook store in your region and discovering a new author. You might even consider this a good reason to keep your Kindle around, because there are plenty of good deals to be had. Reduced expression of interferon regulatory factor 1 in pulmonary adenocarcinomas and lymphomas with DNA hypomethylation: a meta-analysis and pathologic evidence. DNA hypomethylation is observed in some cancers and serves as a surrogate for altered expression of tumor suppressor genes. The authors tested the hypothesis that interferon regulatory factor 1 (IRF1) expression is altered in hypomethylated pulmonary cancers. A comprehensive search of the published literature was conducted to identify articles describing IRF1 expression using polymerase chain reaction (PCR) on RNA extracted from primary tumors with DNA hypomethylation, and to analyze frequency of hypomethylation in lung cancer. The authors compared the frequency of hypomethylation with IRF1 expression in benign versus malignant lung lesions and with smoking history. A meta-analysis was performed to determine the effect of IRF1 expression on overall and disease-free survival. Two hundred thirty-two studies were identified from which 12 that met inclusion criteria were included in the study. Ninety-eight adenocarcinomas and 22 adenosquamous carcinomas were identified. Quantitation of the effect of hypomethylation showed that 29% (49/172) of lung tumors with evidence of DNA hypomethylation expressed low levels of IRF1 mRNA. Adenocarcinomas and adenosquamous carcinomas (AD-ASC) had similar frequencies of hypomethylation compared with benign tumors ( $P = 0.25$ ). A meta-analysis combining the results from the 12 studies demonstrated that only 11% of lung cancers with DNA hypomethylation expressed low levels of IRF1 compared with 24% of those without evidence of DNA hypomethylation ( $P = 0.05$ ). Only 10% of smokers expressed low levels of IRF1 compared with 28% of those without smoking history ( $P = 0.12$ ). In conclusion, this study demonstrated that there is an association between decreased IRF1 mRNA expression and DNA hypomethylation in pulmonary carcinomas. This has potentially prognostic significance in that IRF1 serves as a regulatory protein in myeloid differentiation and in innate
