He was nearly done, he could feel it. The plan, their plan was almost complete. He caught a glimpse of her reflection in the darkness. Her hair was mussed as if she had been tossed about. Her eyes were red, the whites barely showing. She was exhausted. Her head was slumped against the wall, her chest heaved with her labored breathing. Cale moved to her, pulled her up. "Come on, Car'a'nh." "No." "No? I'm not leaving you again. Not until we are out of here." "I can't." "Yes, you can." "I won't." "You will. We will." He pushed her down onto the cot and straddled her, pulling her head into his chest. He pushed his hand into her hair, looking for the nape of her neck, the soft area, and found it. The muscles were weak. She was ready to drop. He shook his head and held her. "I love you, Car'a'nh." She did not answer. * * * Cale heard a sound. Not far off, it was. Faint at first, almost like a sniffling, like a little girl. He was scared. He looked at Car'a'nh, and she was sleeping peacefully. She was fine. He had had his final classes, had no classes scheduled. The day was lost, a day he didn't want. He had changed clothes before his final exam. He had let a little hair down. He had been drinking, and he didn't mind admitting it. He felt he owed it to himself, to Car'a'nh. He just wanted to relax for a bit, have some fun. He wanted to be himself for a little bit. He needed to be himself.

A: I will just point out that the esophagus is part of the digestive system. For the record, I learned about the definition of "gastro" in class today, and it is from Martin Nyerges and Timothy S. Walsh: Gastro-intestinal Diseases of Cats and Dogs: A Clinical Approach: The term "gastrointestinal" is a broad term that can refer to the full range of gastrointestinal organs and function (p. 40). This includes the entire digestive tract from the mouth to the anus, as well as the alimentary system. This includes the esophagus, the stomach, the small intestine, the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. B: Seems I couldn't help but mention "the" despite the fact that, apparently, some people don't have a problem with this. Gothic-Q Mystery Science Theater 3000 to the Guardian Man in black: "I am the Eye of Terror:" Is that a tattoo? As I was spending all day waiting on my son's orthodontist appointment, I had the genius idea to turn to the Guardian. They've never had any in-depth coverage of Mystery Science Theater 3000, though I'm sure they would, had it not been for Jim's suicide. I turn on my laptop. I'm looking for recent coverage of Mystery Science Theater 3000, one of my favorite shows. Google turns up the same thing the Guardian did: A story from two years ago, with the blurb, "Listening to Mystery Science Theater 3000 can be a bad idea." So I gave up. I turned on the TV. The Empire Strikes Back was playing, so I settled in to watch that. But I couldn't stop thinking about my son. He's a great kid, smart and funny, and he's been asking to see the latest R-rated movie. So I started Googling. Now I was looking for a review of Dawn of the Dead, a horror movie that comes with a "Parental Advisory" rating. And while Googling that, I found a review of the DVD, and learned that there was a sequel. And so I started Googling that, and turned up 2d92ce491b
