The Randomness and Obscurity of the Written Text Category:1984 books Category:Role-playing game books Category:Star Trek: The Original Seriesnews A Minnesota County Is Shutting Down Its Justice Of The Peace Office Amid A Sizable Budget Gap Thanks to the Great Recession, government budgets are shrinking around the country, and North Dakota is no exception. In fact, the Office of Justice Assistance is predicting that North Dakota will have an operating budget shortfall of over $6 million in the next two years. In the interest of creating a sustainable budget, the Ramsey County Board of Commissioners voted to close its offices on March 19, 2016. The decision was not a popular one, and local politicians and county leaders were hoping to avoid the shuttering of any of their offices until they could be sure they could find funding elsewhere. However, on Friday, March 24, the commissioners were told that the Ramsey County Justice of the Peace Office will be closing its doors at the end of this year. The decision has angered many judges, who are particularly upset because they had been told that their offices would not be affected. Now, it appears that they will close at the end of the year and be merged into the Ramsey County Sheriff's Office. This has left many judges in a difficult situation. Ramsey County Sheriff Bob Fletcher says that the costs of operating a separate justice of the peace office are high. "What we've done is look at the costs of the justice of the peace office. We've looked at the cost of providing training for all of the cases we have as well as the court clerks, the court staff, the administrative staff." "The total cost is about $2.5 million a year, and that's based on what the county's requesting in the budget." Fletcher continues, "That's with all of the personnel we have. We have an office full of people." "All of those costs plus maintenance, supplies, are all on top of the $6 million the county is trying to save. The total cost would be over $8 million a year. So we have to look at the costs that are in the jurisdiction." In May of 2013
