is the process of improving the quality and quantity of website traffic to a website or web page from search engines. Links from quality sites such as news portals and company sites can make your site highly visible in search engines. But Google, Chrome, Yahoo, MSN and other websites may complain that search engines indicate that a site with poor quality links is too close to the top of the search results list and cannot enjoy its high ranking. The problem with some sites is that you have to "dig deep"

to find bad links, and not just raise the entry threshold (for example, to 4th), which prevents search engines from singling you out as a low-quality site. Therefore, you need to think about the performance of the site when you are at the top of the search list to be sure. That your good links are really necessary for your site. Before you start optimizing your site and promoting it, make sure that it meets all the requirements of search engines: it must be available for indexing and understanding by search engines.

Therefore, the best solution is to prepare content updates throughout the year that will indicate your regular work on the site. If you're looking to cut down on the volume of your content, then it can be quite beneficial to upgrade it. You need to understand that you should get rid of all bad links. If you understand that there are links that can affect the ranking of your site, then you must definitely remove them.Perhaps instead of removing links, you should perform additional actions in search engines, such as adding keywords to site pages, or writing an article on the site, or linking to a page. It is important to know that if a site is not updated, it needs to be checked to determine if this check is creating new links and thereby slowing down or hindering the site's activity. Read more in the Optimizing for Google Tutorial. The "volume" in terms of the knowledge and experience of the optimizer refers to the number of pages on which there is a sufficient amount of content. Check that your site contains enough content and make sure that the amount of content is sufficient for your site to rank well. If your site is not in the search, then this may mean that you are not filling it well enough. Paid content creation services are very helpful in creating content and optimizing it, but the content has to be in the style of the site, so you need to work with yourself and find a compromise between the theme of your site and your style. Content should be understood as factors influencing relevance
