Targeted disruption of the Sirt3 gene extends the lifespan of mice. These results provide evidence that a reduction of Sirt3 is sufficient to extend the lifespan of adult mice. Human SIRT3 contains all the essential functional domains and motifs that are conserved among other Sirtuins. The Sirt3 gene is expressed in a wide range of mouse tissues, as well as in a variety of human tissues. Therefore, Sirt3 appears to be a target for pharmacological intervention in the treatment of human diseases, as well as in the treatment of aging. 4 , - 2 * v = - 2 . S u p p o s e
