Advanced glycation end-product AGE-RAGE interaction has dual effects on memory and insulin receptor tyrosine phosphorylation in aging rat brain. Advanced glycation end-product-receptor for advanced glycation end-product (AGE-RAGE) axis promotes oxidative stress and alters A β metabolism, leading to cognitive decline. However, the mechanism of AGE-RAGE interaction with impaired insulin signaling and insulin resistance is not well understood. This study aims to determine whether AGE-RAGE interaction is associated with memory impairment and insulin receptor (IR) tyrosine phosphorylation (IR-PY) in aging rats. Memory impairment was determined in a passive avoidance task. Cerebral IR-PY, phospho-IR (IR-PY), Receptor for advanced glycation end-products (RAGE), phospho-RAGE (RAGE-PY), superoxide dismutase (SOD), and malondialdehyde (MDA) were measured. Blood pressure, heart rate, and body weight of aged rats were significantly reduced compared with adult rats. The number of crossed platform, latency, and memory retention of aged rats were markedly decreased compared with adult rats. The IR-PY, RAGE, and RAGE-PY in the cerebral cortex and hippocampus were significantly decreased in aged rats. In contrast, cerebral cortex MDA and SOD were significantly increased. AGE-RAGE interaction was significantly increased in aged brain tissues, but it was decreased in the cerebral cortex and hippocampus after an intraperitoneal injection of sRAGE. SOD, IR-PY, and RAGE-PY in aged rats were significantly increased compared with adult rats. In contrast, RAGE, IR-PY, MDA, and RAGE-PY were significantly decreased in the cerebral cortex and hippocampus after sRAGE treatment. These findings indicated that AGE-RAGE interaction may have a dual effect on cognitive impairment and insulin resistance in aging rats. It can be reduced by sRAGE by suppressing oxidative stress and maintaining insulin signaling.Q: FFmpeg tag and no includes are allowed in the middle of the source I have a.mp4 file with a single video track, I want to create a new video file with the same video but different audio track.
