Mayor Bloomberg Finds the Time to be 'Nauseated' Mayor Michael Bloomberg gets disgusted with reporters who ask about his gay marriage remarks. Mayor Michael Bloomberg on Wednesday unleashed on his name-calling game, only when it came to reporters who asked him for a clarification of his recent remarks on gay marriage. "We've been nauseated and disgusted before by the suggestion that if New York says it's not going to support same-sex marriage, it's going to force people, cause problems in other states, force companies to make decisions here in New York that they would never make," Bloomberg said on the John Gambling Show on Tuesday. In his initial response to a CNN reporter, who asked him if he intended to prevent New York companies from operating in states that did not support gay marriage, the mayor yelled at the reporter. "We're really moving on," Bloomberg said. "We have enough of this. It's about time." But when Gambling referred to that incident, the mayor replied, "Oh, please. You don't know what you're talking about." "When you asked a question about our law and what we're doing and how it will impact others, and what the legal implications are, why don't you look at the law, and I'll answer your question," Bloomberg said. "There's nothing to answer. Nobody has proposed that we have gay marriage in New York, so of course we can't have that." "We have the right to protect our laws and if someone violates our laws, of course we can take action against them," Bloomberg said. "It doesn't mean that we don't want to have the best laws and to protect everybody." But the radio host said he still wanted to ask about the mayor's views on gay marriage. "When you asked a question about New York, and whether or not New York's position could force companies to do something in another state, you were asking about New York's law and whether or not it's going to prevent companies from doing business outside of New York," Gambling said. "Well, if you want me
