Abnormal microstructures of the human hepatic tissue in the patients with alcoholic liver injury. Hepatic tissue of the patients with alcoholic liver injury was examined by scanning and transmission electron microscopy and the microstructural damages were categorized as follows: microstructure transformation of hepatocyte and its adhering cells, microstructure transformation of portal tract and its adhering cells, shrunken microstructure of the sinusoid, and ectatic structure of the sinusoid. The extent of these abnormalities and the characteristics of their development were also studied. The degree of the pathological changes was found to be related to the duration of the alcoholism, the age of the patients and the presence or absence of cirrhosis. It was suggested that these abnormalities are the necessary consequences of chronic ingestion of ethanol and its related metabolic products.
