I also have an ICommand attached to an ImageButton on the same page that when clicked, displays the currently selected directory item in a small GridView (just a colored row indicator at the moment). I'm having a problem with the way I listen to any changes to the Collection and use the SelectedDirectoryItem property in the ViewModel. I've tried using the CollectionChanged event, but this fires multiple times on click of the image button and if I unsubscribe, the same item is re-selected. The only solution I can think of is to keep subscribing, but I would prefer to be able to do something like "When SelectedDirectoryItem changes, use this value instead of SelectedDirectoryItem". How can I reliably listen to the collection for any changes, but not "lose" when the user selects another item via the button? Is there a way to get this notification without using the CollectionChanged event? A: Depending on what you want the behavior to be, the collection view may be observing for collection changes (when it is not relevant to your app) and may throw exceptions on changes.
