The Amazing Jack Hanna: New York's Wildlife Corner "I never get tired of this city. It's the energy that's in this city - the opportunities in this city - that makes it so special and so magical for me." So says Jack Hanna to Katie Couric about New York for ABC's "Amazing Animals" special airing on Sunday, Feb. 18 at 8 p.m. ET. Hanna is one of the world's most successful animal behavior researchers. He directs the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium in Ohio, where he researches and manages one of the most diverse groups of animals in the country: the zoo's African penguins. Hanna is a regular contributor to National Geographic magazine and a highly sought-after speaker, who explains his work to audiences of all ages and backgrounds. A recent spot on the CBS program "48 Hours" attracted almost a million viewers. "Amazing Animals" is a global wildlife documentary series that is broadcast in over 40 countries on national TV channels, radio, and the Internet. "Amazing Animals" is directed by award-winning filmmaker Michael Grabois, who began his career in the 1970s with the BBC Natural History Unit. Critical Care Nursing During the past couple of years the healthcare system has significantly revised its approach to treating patients. Community hospitals and public health systems are moving away from the traditional nursing model, one that was based on single nursing care for each patient. Instead, nurses are becoming more aware of their role as team members, playing an integral part of the healthcare team that provides comprehensive and continuous care to critically ill or injured patients. The St. Michael's Hospitals are now offering a new type of community hospital nursing care that provides 24-hour continuous care in a single location.

[Association between the polymorphism of genes involved in the phospholipid metabolic pathway and hyperlipoproteinemia]. To explore the association between the polymorphism of phospholipid metabolic genes involved in the biosynthesis and degradations of lipoprotein phospholipids and hyperlipoproteinemia. The DNA fragments of CTP: phosphocholine cytidyltransferase, 1-acylglycerophosphorylcholine:acylglycerophosphorylcholine cholinephosphotransferase, acyl-coenzyme A: diacylglycerol acyltransferase, cholinephosphotransferase and diacylglycerol kinase were amplified by polymerase chain reaction and the polymorphism of the amplified products was detected by the restrictive digestion method. The phenotypes of these genes were related to hyperlipoproteinemia. The results showed that the polymorphism of the genes had a significant association with the hyperlipoproteinemia types such as type IV hyperlipoproteinemia and type V hyperlipoproteinemia ($P < 0.05$). The same phenomenon was observed with the polymorphism of CTP: phosphocholine cytidyltransferase and the type IV hyperlipoproteinemia and type V hyperlipoproteinemia, but not with type I and II hyperlipoproteinemia ($P > 0.05$). The polymorphism of the two genes may be related to the formation of apoB-containing lipoproteins such as VLDL and chylomicrons.

Combined analysis of studies testing the association between pesticide-use and Parkinson's disease. The association between Parkinson's disease (PD) and pesticide use is still unsettled because many of the existing studies have limitations. We conducted a systematic review of studies with combined analysis. Studies considering the association between pesticide use and PD risk were identified using MEDLINE (PubMed) and the Cochrane Library from inception until March 2014. We extracted the following data from the included studies: first author, year, country, study design, follow-up, population, and pesticide exposure. The meta-analysis was conducted for studies reporting similar pesticide/PD relationships in comparable study settings. Pooled odds ratio (OR) and 95% confidence interval (CI) were calculated using random-
